This series of creative works was produced during my summer school program at SFK. All of the creations originated from a small personal object, the image is on the left, and through observation, imagination, and material exploration, I ultimately developed a series of artistic projects.

Assignment 2

Title: The Mouse Express
Medium: cardboard, stone clay, foam, plaster bandage, paper pulp, recycled materials, acrylic paint
Size: 15*8*8cm; 8*6*5cm; 5*8*4cm; 15*17*6cm;10*8*7cm
Year: 2026

This series of five objects evolves from a wooden beaded bracelet featuring a small mouse charm. Embracing a personal connection to the mouse—a symbol of hyper-vigilance and quirky resilience—I translated this motif into a dark-humored, surreal train spectacle.

Through varied materials, the pieces turn inner anxiety into theatrical play. A giant, top-hatted mouse sculpted from stone clay bursts out of a cardboard locomotive, while a palm-sized startled mouse and a carriage made of flattened rodent forms capture the absurd pressures of daily life. Complemented by a mouse-head container and a custom plaster stage, the work transforms personal vulnerability into a grotesquely charming world of humor and defiance.

Assignment 3

Title: Siete Raton
Medium: cardboard, faux fur, printed packaging boxes, mixed media
Size: 160*180*160 cm
Year: 2026

This spatial installation expands my narrative exploration of the mouse as a symbol of vulnerability, overconsumption, and survival, originating from a wooden beaded mouse-charm bracelet. Reinterpreting the dark humor of my earlier material studies, the work transforms a commercial novelty store into an immersive, critical space interrogating fast fashion, cheap replication, and the questionable ethics of mass production.

Built from a hand-crafted cardboard framework, the installation simulates a cramped, overwhelming retail booth. At its center are three faux-fur mouse-ear hats crafted through custom pattern-making—each representing distinct mouse-human personas navigating a hyper-commercialized world. Nearly 50 custom packaging boxes are densely stacked along the walls alongside branded "mouse-persona" foam boards, creating a suffocating retail atmosphere that mimics the unhygienic conditions of sweatshops. To bridge consumer culture with audience interaction, the space features handmade branded merchandise, including custom mouse logos and an interactive display cabinet housing surveys that capture public sentiment on mass production. Through this dense, commodity-driven environment, the installation directly confronts the human and environmental costs hidden behind cheap, trendy design.
